

Stefan Scholtes

Dennis Gillings Professor of Health Management and Professor of Operations and Technology Management, Judge Business School, University of Cambridge

Stefan Scholtes joined the University of Cambridge in 1996. His research and teaching focuses on health system design and management, and on service innovation and is strongly practice-based and embedded in close collaborations with executives and clinicians in health systems, hospitals and primary care practices in the UK and the USA.

He is founding director of the Cambridge Centre for Health Leadership & Enterprise, chair of the board of the largest primary care practice in the East of England, and co-founder of the East of England Joint Evidence and Intelligence Cell established in 2020 between the NHS and Cambridge Judge Business School to support COVID planning in the region. He holds honorary appointments with Cambridge University Hospitals and the Royal Papworth Hospital in Cambridge.

Stefan Scholtes is founding department editor of the healthcare management department at Management Science and has held editorial positions with Operations Research, Mathematics of Operations Research, and the SIAM Journal on Optimization.
